This book traces the often uncanny relationships between Irish- and Jewish-Americans, arguing for the centrality of these diasporic groups to the development of American popular music, fiction, and especially drama. The book reads such cultural forms as tenement fiction, Tin Pan Alley music, and melodrama as part of a larger "circum-North Atlantic" world in which texts and performers from Ireland, Europe, and America were involved in a continuous cultural exchange within which stereotypes and performances of Jewishness and Irishness took center stage. For this reason, such Irish writers as James Joyce, Bernard Shaw, and Sean O'Casey played pivotal roles in the development of modern American culture, particularly as they influenced and interacted with writers like Elmer Rice, Clifford Odets, Henry Roth, and many others. Such Irish-American writers as Eugene O'Neill were similarly influenced by their interactions with Jewish-American writers like Michael Gold and Edward Dahlberg. While focusing on the modern period, this project traces a genealogy of modern drama and fiction to the nineteenth-century stage in which Irish and Jewish melodrama—and the appearances of international stars in such roles as Shylock and Leah, the Forsaken—shaped the often contradictory and excessive dimensions of ethnicity that are both allo-Semitic and allo-Hibernian. It also explores the larger dimensions of an Irish-Jewish unconscious underlying cultural production in America. The closing chapter considers more recent representations of Irish-Jewish interactions by John Banville, Brendan Behan, Norman Mailer, and Harold Pinter; and examples from a newer immigrant literature bring this discussion into the present.

Plasmonic Effects in Metal-Semiconductor Nanostructures

Alexey A. Toropov and Tatiana V. Shubina

ABSTRACT

This book offers an up-to-date overview of the growing trends in the field of solid state physics known as plasmonics. Initially, plasmonics was concerned with the study of resonant interactions of light with various metal structures. In recent years, however, the emphasis has shifted towards investigation of more sophisticated nanostructures involving not only metals but also semiconductors. The combination of strong surface plasmon resonances inherent to conducting structures with high responsivity of semiconductors to external electromagnetic fields have opened new exciting pathways to cont ... (-) Abstract and Keywords

This chapter summarizes the fundamental facts and concepts of classical electromagnetism, applied in successive chapters to the consideration of the electronic plasma excitations supported by various metal and metal-semiconductor nanostructures. The chapter outlines the basic principles of electrodynamic, the Drude theory describing dielectric function of free electrons, propagation of surface plasmon polaritons at a plane interface between a metal and an insulator, and excitation of localized surface plasmons in metal particles. The quasi-static approximation is represented for the general case of ellipsoidal particles, whereas the exact Mie theory is employed to define plasmon resonances in metal particles. This chapter gives a basic overview of the plasmonics and electrodynamic phenomena that are consistent with the theory of classical electromagnetism.

Unraveled Genes: Reinventing the Human in the Molecular Age

By Helga Nowotny, and Giuseppe Testa

This book charts the mutual reconfiguration between scientific and social innovations in and around the molecular life sciences. Today's biology is making visible what was once invisible. It parses life into new units of sense-making and reassembles them into new forms: from genes to clones, from embryonic stages to the building-blocks ... Read more
